
Downloaded from: http://insight.cumbria.ac.uk/id/eprint/2332/

Usage of any items from the University of Cumbria’s institutional repository ‘Insight’ must conform to the following fair usage guidelines.

Any item and its associated metadata held in the University of Cumbria’s institutional repository Insight (unless stated otherwise on the metadata record) may be copied, displayed or performed, and stored in line with the JISC fair dealing guidelines (available here) for educational and not-for-profit activities provided that

• the authors, title and full bibliographic details of the item are cited clearly when any part of the work is referred to verbally or in the written form

• a hyperlink/URL to the original Insight record of that item is included in any citations of the work

• the content is not changed in any way

• all files required for usage of the item are kept together with the main item file.

You may not

• sell any part of an item

• refer to any part of an item without citation

• amend any item or contextualise it in a way that will impugn the creator’s reputation

• remove or alter the copyright statement on an item.

The full policy can be found here. Alternatively contact the University of Cumbria Repository Editor by emailing insight@cumbria.ac.uk.
AND EVERYTHING CROOKED WILL BECOME STRAIGHT
This small publication collects fragments of text and image which choose to confront transgression, in sympathy and antipathy, through a language commandeered from the technological era. Repeated, deleted, rewritten, and enhanced, human behaviour is processed; morality is codified; infraction is sequenced; and everything crooked is made straight.

Adolphe Quételet’s A Treatise on Man counters the singularity of murder through statistics; Stephen Nelson’s palimpsestic, ascemic poetry renounces meaning in favour of pure visual data; my article on Egon Schiele contests the transgressive as an economic gambit; Jimmy Reid’s Rectoral Address challenges the ongoing codification of marginalising habits; Denise Bonetti mines the dense rancour of Roosh V to programme a new subtext; and, Jane Topping reboots Blade Runner’s Esper machine to kick-start the viewer’s impossible descent into the image.

Together these dissident fragments collate histories and situations to incite a new kind of consciousness. They bring to the fore the codes and systems through which we now view the world and ask us to challenge them, to again problematise morality, to step forward and not back, to crook that which appears straight.

Marcus Jack

Published on the occasion of TRANSIT #3: and everything crooked will become straight, the third instalment in a series of artists’ film screening programmes. Further details can be found on p.34 - 36.
A TREATISE ON MAN

AND THE DEVELOPMENT OF HIS FACULTIES

By M. A. QUETELET.

PERPETUAL SECRETARY OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF BRUSSELS; FELLOW AND MEMBER OF THE INSTITUTE OF FRANCE, ETC.

NOW FIRST TRANSLATED INTO ENGLISH.

EDINBURGH:
PUBLISHED BY WILLIAM AND ROBERT CHAMBERS.
1842.
subject, under certain influences, might escape for ever the notice of the observer. To him, for example, who had examined the laws of light more in a single drop of water, the brilliant phenomenon of the rainbow would be totally unimagined; it might even happen that the idea of the production of such an appearance would never have occurred to him, unless accidentally placed in favourable circumstances to observe it.

What idea should we have of the mortality of mankind by observing only individuals? Instead of the alarming horror to which it is subject, our knowledge would be limited to a series of simple and evident facts, leading us to the total conclusions of the laws of nature.

The remarks we make respecting human mortality, may be equally extended to man's physical and moral faculties. To attain a knowledge of the laws regulating these latter (moral) faculties, a sufficient number of observations must be collected, in order to bring out what is constant, and to set aside what is purely accidental. If, in order to facilitate this study, all human actions could be registered, it might be supposed that their numbers would vary from year to year as widely as human caprice. But this is not what we in reality observe, at least for that class of actions of which we have succeeded in obtaining a registry. I shall quote but a single example, but it merits the attention of all philosophic minds. In every thing which relates to crimes, the same numbers are reproduced so constantly, that it becomes impossible to misapprehend it—ever in respect to those crimes which seem perfectly human foresight, such as murders committed in general at the close of quarrels, arising without a motive, and under other circumstances, to all appearances the most fortuitous or accidental; nevertheless, experience proves that murders are committed annually, not only pretty nearly to the same extent, but even that the instruments employed are in the same proportions. Now, if this occurs in the case of crimes whose origin seems to be purely accidental, what shall we say of those admitted to be the result of reflection?

This remarkable constancy with which the same crimes appear annually in the same order, drawing down on their perpetrators the same punishments, in the same proportions, is a singular fact, which we owe to the statistics of the tribunals. In various writings I have done my utmost to put this evidence clearly before the public; I have never failed annually to report, that there is a budget which we pay with frightful regularity—it is that of prisons, dungeons, and scaffolds. Now, it is this budget which, above all, we ought to endeavour to reduce; and every year, the numbers have confirmed my previous statements to such a degree, that I might have said, perhaps with more precision, "there is a tribute which man pays with more regularity than that which he owes to nature, or to the treasure of the state, namely, that which he pays to crime." Sad condition of humanity! We might even predict annually how many individuals will stain their hands with the blood of their fellow-men, how many will be forgets, how many will deal in poison, pretty nearly in the same way as we may foretell the annual births and deaths.

Society includes within itself the germs of all the crimes committed, and at the same time the necessary facilities for their development. It is the social state, in some measure, which prepares these crimes, and the criminal is merely the instrument to execute them. Every social state supposes, then, a certain number and a certain order of crimes, these being merely the necessary consequences of its organisation. This observation, so discouraging at first sight, becomes, on the contrary, consolatory, when examined more nearly, by showing the possibility of ameliorating the human race, by modifying their institutions, their habits, the amount of their information, and, generally, all which influences their mode of existence. In fact, this observation is merely the extension of a law already well known to all who have studied the physical condition of society in a philosophic manner; it is, that so long as the same causes exist, we must expect a repetition of the same effects. What has induced some to believe that moral phenomena did not obey this law, has been the too great influence ascribed at all times to man himself over his actions: it is a remarkable fact in the history of science, that the more extended human knowledge has become, the more limited human power, in that respect, has constantly been considered. This globe, of which the theft, the haughty possessor, becomes, in the eyes of the astronomer, merely a grain of dust floating in the immensity of space: an earthquake, a tempest, an inundation, may destroy in an instant an entire people, or ruin the labours of twenty ages. On the other hand, when man appears most influenced by his own actions, we see paid an annual tribute to nature; and deaths, as regular as may be. In the regular reproduction of crime, we see again reproduced another proof of the narrow field in which he exercises his individual activity. But if each step in the career of science thus gradually diminishes his importance, his pride has a compensation in the greater idea of his intellectual power, by which he has been enabled to perceive those laws which seem to be, by their nature, placed for ever beyond his grasp.

It would appear, then, that moral phenomena, when observed on a great scale, are found to resemble physical phenomena; and we thus arrive, in inquiries of this kind, at the fundamental principle, that the greater the number of individuals observed, the more do individual peculiarities, whether physical or moral, become effaced, and leave in a prominent point of view the general facts, by virtue of which society exists and is preserved. It belongs only to a few men gifted with superior talent, to disturb visibly the social state; and Self Portrait with Splayed Fingers (1911), Egon Schiele
Schiele’s Pathological Body: Transgression as Capital

At the 1909 Kunstschau Egon Schiele presents to the Viennese market an image of internal suffering and unending angst. His art is seemingly employed as a corrective emotional experience – the residue of an excavation into the psyche of the self. What results is a disfigured body, one which recalls a tradition of fascination and fetishisation: a modern interpretation of gothic sensibilities.

By 1910, Schiele’s oeuvre could be marked by an obsessive determination to chronicle the self in a painterly vocabulary that ruminated upon the body-in-pain. His success, art historian Gemma Blackshaw argues, “shows that the image of the pathological body he offered was one which clearly appealed. We could interpret this appeal in terms of the body’s functioning as ‘spectacle.’”

A binary is created between Schiele’s quite conscious marketability and the alleged cathartic necessity of his practice. Schiele’s work might be considered evidence of this essential tension: art as psychological remedy and as carefully poised market gambit.

Schiele transcribes the grotesquely disfigured figure onto canvas. The privilege of the medium, unlike a medical photograph, grants a distance between the viewer and subject. It is within this distance - intensified by the absence of a rational figure-ground relationship, where the body floats amidst white space – that an abstracting is encouraged. The indirect confrontation of viewer and subject prompts voyeuristic awe. This sort of fictionalising of the subject dematerialises the pathological body inviting aesthetic and social contemplation.

Schiele disarms realism, leaving only an unquiet spectacle. It is in this spectacular quality that we may correlate Schiele’s work more with a history of spectatorship and voyeurism than as a product of psychological relief. The canvas levies a well-rehearsed cultural investment in the perverse and unfamiliar – what Freud might synthesise as the uncanny. Where phantasmagoria capitalised on periphery fears, of the supernatural and disastrous, Schiele similarly capitalises on that which is grotesque yet fascinating – the fragility of mortality.

The long tradition of perversity-as-profit in Western art is well encapsulated by Theodore Gericault’s The Raft of the Medusa (1819). Like Schiele, Gericault takes a societal anxiety – here, a nepotistic and incompetent monarchy whose mismanagement is alleged to have caused the wreck and consequently the death of French nationals. And with graphic embellishment, founded in studies of the disfigured body, the artist sensationalises trauma. Gericault’s most successful work exhibited successfully dramatised and then fictionalised contemporary anxieties to attract the attention of the cautious voyeur. The psycho-social normalcy is absent, and that which we fear is centred - Gericault examines shocking bestial behaviours, and degeneration is too at the centre of Schiele’s concern.

Blackshaw refers to Griselda Pollock’s model for the establishing of an avant-garde, Reference, Deference & Difference, to construct an evolutionary path between Gustav Klimt and Schiele, whereby Schiele saw and appreciated in Klimt’s University Paintings the capacity to shock. But we might understand this evolution to begin much earlier. Schiele operates in the tradition of the spectacle. He treads a well-established path adapting new reference for his purpose. Blackshaw claims that the photography disseminated in journals like the Nouvelle Iconographie de la Salpetriere is that new reference to which Schiele’s work is bound. Blackwell describes an invasion of pathology into art and vice versa, claiming the journal to be a sourcebook for the artist in finding new iconographies of the body.

The voyeuristic interest of patrons in such photography both creates and anticipates a market for paintings of a similar nature. Regarded as the physical instantiation of mania, the depicted figures are at once a parable for cautious living and the image of periphery anxiety which artists hungered to capitalise upon. Therein, Schiele’s success might be considered the product of timely and intelligent selection: the choosing of a subject that succinctly allegorised the anxieties of Vienna, a city which had indeed grown too quickly. His is a market-ready transgression.
The Raft of the Medusa (1818-1819), Theodore Gericault
Glance into the world just as though time were gone: and everything crooked will become straight to you.

Friedrich Nietzsche, unpublished fragments dating to November 1882 – February 1883.
ALIENATION

James Reid

UNIVERSITY OF GLASGOW
The challenge we face is that of rooting out anything and everything that distorts and devalues human relations. Let me give two examples from contemporary experience to illustrate the point.

Recently on television I saw an advertisement. The scene is a banquet. A gentleman is on his feet proposing a toast. His speech is full of phrases like “this full-bodied specimen”. Sitting beside him is a young, buxom woman. The image she projects is not pompous but foolish. She is visibly preening herself, believing that she is the object of this bloke’s eulogy. Then he concludes—“and now I give...” then a brand name of what used to be described as Empire sherry. The woman is shattered, hurt and embarrassed. Then the laughter. Derisive and cruel laughter. The real point, of course, is this: in this charade the viewers were obviously expected to identify not with the victim but with her tormentors.

The other illustration is the widespread, implicit acceptance of the concept and term, “the rat race”. The picture it conjures up is one where we are scurrying around scrambling for position, trampling on others, back-stabbing, all in pursuit of personal success. Even genuinely intended friendly advice can sometimes take the form of someone saying to you, “Listen, you look after number one”. Or as they say in London, “Bang the bell, Jack, I’m on the bus”.

To the students I address this appeal. Reject these attitudes. Reject the values and false morality that underlie these attitudes. A rat race is for rats. We’re not rats. We’re human beings. Reject the insidious pressures in society that would blunt your critical faculties to all that is happening around you, that would caution silence in the face of injustice lest you jeopardise your chances of promotion and self-advancement.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th>1826</th>
<th>1827</th>
</tr> </thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Murders in general,</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gun and pistol,</td>
<td>241</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sabre, sword, stiletto,</td>
<td>56</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>poniard, dagger, &amp;c.,</td>
<td>15</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Knife,</td>
<td>30</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cudgels, cane, &amp;c.,</td>
<td>23</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Stones,</td>
<td>20</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cutting, stabbing, and</td>
<td>33</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>bruising instruments,</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Strangulations,</td>
<td>2</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>By precipitating and</td>
<td>6</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>drowning,</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kicks and blows with</td>
<td>28</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>the fist,</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fire,</td>
<td>17</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Unknown,</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
NOWADAYS

Words taken from Roosh V’s “10 Reasons Why Heterosexual Men Should Leave America”

Denise Bonetti
The following describes a long journey to Eastern Europe, South America, or Southeast Asia.

Problems come from worship culture and thirsty personalities. Beautiful iPhones are a product of laws about everything. A good example is Los Angeles banning fun call means getting arrested and going to jail. Foreign police enjoy you getting arrested. Take some beers to drink i to get out of trouble. The more you worry about it, the harder that Google search experience a minor meltdown. (Laugh if you want, My health issues came up abroad in environments silly and unrealistic sure.
live abroad, travel is a cliché to find yourself, traveling I learned that loneliness improves my social interaction something I didn’t realize home where I was surrounded by traditional human beings homosexuals abroad don’t care what annoys me t heir hitting on me when I’m alive and well in foreign countries, how they appear beautiful and strong

In foreign countries you can share Indian girls with a racist. You can disagree with liberals from Denmark, Iceland, and Sweden.

You will pay less for American cars. Most foreign people run more frequently and don’t contain chemicals GMO a center corporate propaganda is mostly incomplete until made by corporations. in a foreign country, the ads ‘re in a different language. watching television ‘ll result in a caged cocaine minimalist lifestyle where things positively affect your mood. you buy things because objects bring happiness.

You see the world

Even if You don’t understand most of your beliefs world view programmed you reality and to toss out garbage direct observation.

America is not the best country in the world and everything crooked

TRANSIT #3

DORINE AGUERRE · MILES JOSEPH · LUCIE RACHEL JANE TOPPING · JOSIE RAE TURNBULL curated by MARCUS JACK will become straight

TRANSIT ARTS is a nomadic programme of artists’ film, screened from the back of a van. With narrative film the dominant aesthetic, this episode takes a more transgressive approach: bending, rearranging, and rewriting the record. The screen becomes a palimpsest of ideas and images; stories overlaid and erased; found footage is repurposed; the mise-en-scene dismantled; new realities are constructed; and old ones buried.

Locations

PEÑA
5 Eton Lane
Glasgow, G12 8NB
Thursday 17.03.16
7.00pm - 9.00pm

CCA: Centre for Contemporary Arts
350 Sauchiehall Street
Glasgow, G2 3DJ
Friday 18.03.16
7.00pm - 9.00pm

THE GLAD CAFE
1006A Pollokshaws Road
Glasgow, G41 2HG
Saturday 19.03.16
7.00pm - 9.00pm

Featured Films

Remediation (2010) UK, 4 mins
Miles Joseph
Remediation considers the moral ambiguity of artists’ use of visual sampling and found footage in order to create new works. Using found footage sourced from the internet the film sets out to playfully visualise the recorded audio interviews through visual rhetoric.

Do Not Cross (2015) UK, 3 mins
Dorine Aguerre
Do Not Cross is an experiment in the construction of a mise-en-scene. This video uses the aesthetics associated with investigative drama to question the theatrics and sensationalism of mass media.
Peter (2014)
Jane Topping
UK, 30 mins
Peter seeks to re-frame a classic of dystopian cinema, Blade Runner (1982), with the intention of positioning the artist within the text and so implying that such radical gestures are not only warranted and necessary, but also implicit in the contemporary viewer’s experience of watching film.

Glaucoma’s Moat (2015)
Josie Rae Turnbull
UK, 5 mins
Glaucoma’s Moat is a reworked standard 8mm film found whilst trespassing the site of Campion House, London, a former Jesuit pre-seminary college. The film was digitally transferred without knowledge of its content, intent or authorship; what remains is a baseless narrative created entirely in the viewer’s watching.

After_001 (2016)
Miles Joseph
UK, 2 mins
After_001 is the first of a series of images showing scenes with no human inhabitants that depict moments either before or after something has occurred. The film plays with time, exploring the cinematic aesthetic, sound-image relationships, and mise-en-scene.

Mother Father (2015)
Ludie Rachel
UK, 12 mins
Mother Father is an intimate insight into a relationship constantly challenged by issues regarding gender. Issues that were kept a secret from everyone outside of their relationship, including their daughters. A true story, captured and shared by the youngest daughter of two very brave women.