

Murphy, David F. ORCID: <https://orcid.org/0000-0001-8416-5627> (2016)
Editorial: Journal of Corporate Citizenship (64). Journal of Corporate Citizenship, 2016 (64). pp. 3-5.

Downloaded from: <https://insight.cumbria.ac.uk/id/eprint/2905/>

Usage of any items from the University of Cumbria's institutional repository 'Insight' must conform to the following fair usage guidelines.

Any item and its associated metadata held in the University of Cumbria's institutional repository Insight (unless stated otherwise on the metadata record) may be copied, displayed or performed, and stored in line with the JISC fair dealing guidelines (available here) for educational and not-for-profit activities provided that

- the authors, title and full bibliographic details of the item are cited clearly when any part of the work is referred to verbally or in the written form
- a hyperlink/URL to the original Insight record of that item is included in any citations of the work
- the content is not changed in any way
- all files required for usage of the item are kept together with the main item file.

You may not

- sell any part of an item
- refer to any part of an item without citation
- amend any item or contextualise it in a way that will impugn the creator's reputation
- remove or alter the copyright statement on an item.

The full policy can be found here.

Alternatively contact the University of Cumbria Repository Editor by emailing insight@cumbria.ac.uk.

Editorial

Issue 64 December 2016

David F. Murphy

Institute for Leadership and Sustainability (IFLAS), University of Cumbria, UK

The Journal of Corporate Citizenship (JCC) Issue 64 is a Special Issue on “The UN Global Compact and the Encyclical Laudato Si”, guest-edited by Oliver Williams, C.S.C., Director of the Center for Ethics and Religious Values in Business, Mendoza College of Business, University of Notre Dame. In collaboration with the United Nations Global Compact Office, the University of Notre Dame hosted a conference in April 2016—“A Global Compact for Sustainable Development: Advancing Care for Our Common Home”—to discuss the Encyclical Laudato Si and the UN Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs). In his Guest Editorial, Williams highlights the major contributions of each of the articles in this issue that arose from that conference.

JCC 64 is not the first issue of the journal with a UN Global Compact focus. In the Autumn of 2003, I co-edited JCC 11 which was a theme issue on “The United Nations Global Compact”. In our Introduction to the issue, fellow guest editors Malcolm McIntosh, Rupesh Shah and I acknowledged that the Compact was in its infancy and that the articles in JCC 11 were “tentative and exploratory”, as was the initiative itself at the time. And in her Editorial, then General Editor Sandra Waddock noted that early reactions in the public arena ... ranged from kudos for using the UN’s moral authority and convening power to push business into principled and responsible actions with respect to human rights, labour and the natural environment, to charges of corporate “bluewashing” (wrapping company actions in the blue UN flag without real substance behind them) (p. 3).

Waddock concluded then that “the truth ... probably lies somewhere in between” (p. 3).

Before looking forward, let us look back at the evolution of the Global Compact from its inception to the present day. In January 1999, the seventh UN Secretary-General, Kofi Annan, first invited the international business community to enter into a global compact with the UN and civil society, and “articulated a vision of a more sustainable and just world with partnership as its cornerstone” (Murphy, 2002, p. 63). But, even as the Global Compact was still emerging at the turn of the century, the idea of UN–business collaboration was under attack. Corporate watchdogs such as the Transnational Resource & Action Center challenged the Secretary-General, participating UN agencies and their new corporate partners from the Compact's outset (Karliner, Cavanaugh and Bennis, 1999; Transnational Resource & Action Center, 2000). Global Compact critique and challenge from civil society, academia and from within the UN system itself has continued over the years (see: Richter, 2004; Knight & Smith, 2008; Utting & Zammit, 2009). Nonetheless, 16 years on, the Global Compact claims to be the world's largest corporate sustainability initiative with its website listing more than 11,000 participants, comprising approximately 9,000 business entities and 2,000 other organizations.

In recent years, the Global Compact and other corporate sustainability, corporate citizenship and corporate social responsibility (CSR) initiatives have continued to face scrutiny from civil society and other sectors. In the late 1990s, the primary social and environmental critics of large corporates were NGOs, trade unions and anti-globalization activist groups. With the publication of Laudato Si in May 2015, the Roman Catholic Church and its leaders are presenting new challenges to globalization and some of its key international players such as corporations, governments and the UN system. For example, note this 2015 critical analysis of the global economic system by Cardinal Peter Turkson of Ghana, President of the Pontifical Council for Justice & Peace and recently appointed by Pope Francis as the first prefect of the Dicastery for the Promotion of Integral Human Development: "Much of world remains in poverty, despite abundant resources, while a privileged global elite controls the bulk of the world's wealth and consumes the bulk of its resources" (see Kirchgaessner, 2015). And this overt corporate critique from Laudato Si itself: "the social and environmental responsibility of businesses often gets reduced to a series of marketing and image-enhancing measures" (p. 142).

Cardinal Turkson's words and the excerpt from Laudato Si cited above would not have been out of place in an activist critique of global business in 1999 or more recently. Even Georg Kell (2016), the Global Compact's Founding Director, has recently voiced his concern about "tangential and ultimately unsustainable philanthropic contributions" which are characteristic of many CSR programmes. Kell's new agenda for global corporations is "to adopt a bolder, more activist approach to address the challenges to continued prosperity" founded on "corporate statesmanship, which emphasizes collective leadership and not just responsible individual participation". The current Executive Director of the Global Compact, Lise Kingo (2015), agrees with her predecessor and offers an effective bridge to the Guest Editorial and articles that follow in this Special Issue:

Whether we are talking about scaling up action on the Guiding Principles [on business and human rights] or contributing to the SDGs, we need leadership. Businesses must have top-level commitment and accountability to assess their impacts, engage in genuine dialogue with rights-holders, and to innovate their business models (p. 3).

Laudato Si is hopeful: "Business is a noble vocation, directed to pursuing wealth and improving our world"

(p. 129). The essays that follow offer a path to guide that hope.

References

- Karliner, J., Cavanaugh, J. & Bennis, P. (1999). A Perilous Partnership: The United Nation Development Programme's Flirtation with Corporate Collaboration. San Francisco: Transnational Resource & Action Center in collaboration with the Institute for Policy Studies and the Council on International and Public Affairs. Retrieved from: <http://s3.amazonaws.com/corpwatch.org/downloads/perilous.pdf>
- Kell, G. (2016, October 4). From Corporate Citizenship to Corporate Statesmanship, LinkedIn posting. Retrieved from: <https://www.linkedin.com/pulse/from-corporate-citizenship-statesmanship-georg-kell>
- Kingo, L. (2015, November 18, 16:40). Remarks of Ms. Lise Kingo, Executive Director of UN Global Compact United Nations Forum on Business and Human Rights. Geneva. Retrieved from: http://www.ohchr.org/Documents/Issues/Business/ForumSession4/LiseKingo_remarks.pdf
- Kirchgaessner, S. (2015, April 28). Vatican official calls for moral awakening on global warming. The Guardian. Retrieved from: <https://www.theguardian.com/environment/2015/apr/28/vatican-climate-change-summit-to-highlight-moral-duty-for-action>
- Knight, G. & Smith, J. (2008). The Global Compact and Its Critics: Activism, Power Relations, and Corporate Social Responsibility. In Leatherman, J. (Ed.), Discipline and Punishment in Global Politics (pp. 191-214). London: Palgrave Macmillan.
- Murphy, D.F. (2002). Towards a Global Compact Agenda for African Enterprises. In Chatterjee, L. (Ed.), Words into Action (pp. 63-67). London: Faircourt and International Institute for Environment and Development (IIED). Retrieved from: <http://pubs.iied.org/pdfs/9191IIED.pdf>
- Pope Francis I (2015, May 24). Encyclical Letter "Laudato Si" of The Holy Father Francis on Care for Our Common Home. Libreria Editrice Vaticana, Given in Rome at Saint Peter's. Retrieved from: <https://laudatosi.com/>
- Richter, J. (2004). Public-Private Partnerships and International Health Policy-Making. How Can Public Interests Be Safeguarded? Helsinki: Development Policy Information Unit, Ministry for Foreign Affairs of Finland.
- Transnational Resource & Action Center (2000). Tangled Up in Blue: Corporate Partnerships at the United Nations. San Francisco: Transnational Resource & Action Center (TRAC). Retrieved from: <http://s3.amazonaws.com/corpwatch.org/downloads/tangled.pdf>
- Utting, P. & Zammit, A. (2009). United Nations-Business Partnerships: Good Intentions and Contradictory Agendas. Journal of Business Ethics. 90:39-56. doi:10.1007/s10551-008-9917-7.
- Waddock, S. (2003). Editorial. Journal of Corporate Citizenship 11 (September): 3-4.

